Blossom Box Games to Launch Queer Dating Simulator Roguelite Early Access June 1

Indie developers to release death god-centered action romance, 'Till Death Do Us Part'

CHICAGO, June 8, 2025 — Blossom Box Games is launching early access for its first title, “Till Death Do Us Part,” on Steam Friday, June 1 at 5 p.m. CT. Company executives look to the gaming community to support and provide feedback on its new dating simulator roguelite.

“Till Death Do Us Part” centers around two themes that are prominent in queer communities: love and death. The unique genre combination of dating simulator and roguelite serves the game’s core topics and offers gamers a varied experience.

Players date male, female and nonbinary death gods from the Greek, Egyptian, Mesopotamian and Norse mythologies and work toward one of three different story endings for each god as they select dialogue choices throughout the game. As players romance each deity, they unlock answers toward the overarching mystery surrounding the setting, the city of Calamity, as well as gifts from the gods to use on the battlefield during the roguelite portion of the game.

“After almost two years of work, we’re thrilled to see the gaming community interact with our characters and combat,” said Madalyn Kuzniar, co-founder and creative director of Blossom Box Games. “We’re a team of women and queer creators, and we brought those experiences to our work. From dialogue to design — even down to how we programmed character movements in combat — it all went into telling a story about death and love of all kinds.”

For an advance copy of the game, reporters and influencers can email blossomboxgames@gmail.com to request an access link.
